Thursday and Friday. Write by hand in pen or pencil. Neat enough to read, not perfect.

Name _____ Date _____

A. Analysis by hand

10 minutes

The train slid into the station like a held breath finally released. Nobody got off. On the platform, a single suitcase waited, its handle still warm from someone's hand.

Choose two words or short phrases from the extract (one to four words each). Complete the chain for each.

Choice 1. Quote: _____

Effect: this makes the reader...

So What? This suggests the writer wants us to...

Choice 2. Quote: _____

B. Plan your piece

Thursday, 5 minutes

Task: Describe an empty place at night.

Aim to fill the next page (about 200 to 250 words). Plan first. Five short answers is enough.

Focus: one moment or one place (not a whole story)

Opening: how will you start? (a small detail, or a wide view that zooms in)

Two precise images (one strong comparison or detail each)

One short sentence for impact: where will it go?

Ending: how will it echo your opening?

C. Your piece

Thursday, 20 minutes

Title: _____

Word count: _____

about 100 words

about 200 words

D. Improve it with ONE technique

Friday, 10 minutes

Tick the one you will use. Improve only that. Do not rewrite everything.

- ☐ Vary sentence length: add one very short sentence where it matters most.
- ☐ Replace a pile of adjectives with one precise image.
- ☐ Make the ending echo the opening.

Rewrite the part you are improving (an opening, an ending, or a few sentences):

E. Self-check

- ☐ I wrote a plan before I started writing.
- ☐ My piece has one clear focus (one moment, one place).
- ☐ I used at least one short sentence for impact.
- ☐ I used one or two precise images, not a pile of adjectives.
- ☐ I checked capital letters, full stops and apostrophes.
- ☐ I read it aloud and fixed at least one awkward sentence.

F. So What? Pick your best sentence

Copy it here:

So what does it make the reader think or feel, and why did you choose those words?

Oral check with a parent (5 minutes)

- ☐ I read my piece aloud.
- ☐ A parent asked "So what does that tell us?" about one sentence, and I answered.
